

Desiree Hunter is a Charleston native, Desiree grew up in her mother's booth in the City Market and from an early age began exploring the city by bike and rollerblades. Over the years she has traveled extensively throughout Europe and East Asia, seeking out markets in every town she visited. After graduating from the College of Charleston with a BA in Anthropology and Spanish, she opened her own booth in the City Market and local farmers' markets selling fresh drinks to tourist and locals alike. Her past experiences have made her acutely aware the benefits, pedestrian-friendly infrastructure and public transportation can have in fostering a vibrant, diverse and more equitable community. She continues to enjoy exploring the greater Charleston area by bicycle, an activity she now shares with her husband and two daughters.
